We are a new record and media label with a firm belief that the future of music, art, film, and other creative works lies in a new model of being open. We take our inspiration from successful, worldwide open software projects such as GNU/Linux, Wikipedia, Blender, and Mozilla. Music is the spirit of freedom and rebellion - our culture should be free and not owned and controlled by anyone. Our mission is to transform the record, film, and media industry overall into an artist driven, creative, free culture that can be shared by all. Our music will be always available for digital download & remix free - under the non-commercial Creative Commons Share Alike License.

Our first album release, “One Bird A Day” contains tracks from nine bands, including the complete new album “Radiowaves” from Florida based electro-folk studio band Sparkydog. Additional highlights include tracks from Brooklyn based art punks Taigaa! (from their upcoming full length album “Off”), a variety of indie pop singles from bands such as The Earbuds, Universal Fuzz Device, and The Seventh Side, as well as NYC based noise/beat rockers More Teeth.

Our goal is to build a global, cooperative network of collaborating artists - who each contribute and utilize the creative works of other contributors to build individual as well as interconnecting albums, videos, movies, games, comics, art, software, poetry, literature, and other new media. This superorganic open system of artists, programmers, collaborators, and creative works will also include the fans, many of whom may also become contributors.

Our vision is that the superorganic open system will offer a viable, high-quality alternative to the commercial record label/movie studio system - and that culture and the artists in general will benefit from being free, collaborative, and open. As the music and media industry in general fights for control and loss of market share to the web, we are embracing what the future of music and media will become.
